Morales de Toro.

SOILS Stony and sandy-clay soils.

Cycle defined by drought and exceptionally high temperatures. The autumn and winter were dry, with one third of the average rainfall for this period. It did not rain until the beginning of April, days before bud break, which was uniform. In May the first heat wave affected flowering. The weather continued hot and dry until mid-August, when cooler nights and thunderstorms softened ripening conditions until the harvest that began at the beginning of August.

A diaphanous red fruit nose with a suggestive floral aspect. Enveloping texture, full of delicacy and charm, with extremely fine tannins.

Bottled in January 2025 after 22 months in new and used 225 and 500 litre, French oak barrels.
